Chinese Bean Sauce Noodles with Meat

Dipping sauce:
1/4 cup rice vinegar (also called rice wine vinegar)
1 Tbl. layu (Japanese sesame chili oil)
2 Tbl. cooking oil
2 to 3 tsp. minced fresh ginger
2 to 3 tsp. minced garlic
1 lb. ground pork
1/4 cup Chinese bean sauce (min see jeung; also called "yellow bean sauce," "brown bean sauce," or just "bean sauce"--"Koon Chun" brand "bean sauce" is good) *
2 tsp. sugar
1 Tbl. sesame oil
3 stalks negi (green onion), chopped (about 1/2 cup)
1 lb. fresh Chinese-style egg noodles

Mix together the rice vinegar and layu in a small bowl. Set aside.

Bring a large pot of water to a boil over high heat. While the water is heating, heat the cooking oil in a large skillet over moderately high heat. Add the ginger and stir fry for a few seconds, then add the garlic and stir fry briefly (but do not brown).

Add the pork and cook, stirring until the meat has started to change color, but do not let it brown completely. Drain off excess fat, and add the bean sauce and sugar. Cook, stirring, until the meat is evenly seasoned and cooked. Stir in the sesame oil and negi. Turn off the heat.

Boil the noodles as follows: Fluff up the noodles and drop in the pot of boiling water. Boil and stir the noodles 3 to 5 minutes (or until the noodles come to a second boil). Pull 1 or 2 noodles out of the water to check if they are done--be careful not to overcook the noodles; the noodles should be firm [al dente, as ji-chan used to say]. Drain the noodles and toss with the meat sauce. Serve with the spicy rice vinegar, to be added to taste. Serves 4.

*Do NOT use “ground bean sauce,” “black bean sauce,” or Japanese miso paste; these are not the same.
Salmon Musubi (rice balls)
[yield 14 to 16 musubi]

I know a lot of purists insist on making their musubi (rice balls) by hand. I "cheat" and use an onigiri-ki, a plastic press that makes 2 triangular-shaped musubi at a time [your friends will be impressed at how uniform and perfectly shaped your musubi are!]. Whether you make musubi by hand or with a press, it takes a bit of practice to know just how much pressure is needed to press the rice together. Too little pressure and the musubi will fall apart; too much pressure and it will be too hard. The first time I made musubi in a press, I must have imagined I was Superman squeezing a piece of coal into a diamond. The result was what my friends called DWARF STAR MUSUBI © because they were super hard and dense. I had managed to transform a mild-mannered, every-day musubi into what seemed like an ultra solid mochi rice cake. Don't repeat my mistake!

3 cups rice, washed; add 3 cups or so of water and soak 15 to 60 minutes before cooking
3/4 lb. to 1 lb. salted salmon
6 sheets of nori (seaweed); cut each sheet into 3 equal strips

Cook the rice; after 30 minutes, fluff it up. Allow to cool for about 10 minutes. Don't allow to get cold—it will be harder to form into musubi.

While the rice is cooking, put the salt salmon in a pot and fill with enough water to cover the salmon. Bring the water to a boil; simmer on low for about 15 minutes [don't boil for more than 30 minutes, or the salmon will get too bland—you want it to stay fairly salty]. Remove from heat, drain, and cool. When the salmon is cool enough to touch, remove the skin, any bones, and the dark parts of the meat (if any). Flake the salmon meat up and set aside.

Use a small musubi press (the triangle-shaped type); fill (loosely) about 2/3 full with cooked rice. Keep a bowl of cold water nearby to dip your fingers into, and poke a small well in the center of the rice with a moistened finger. Fill the well with about a teaspoon or so of the boiled salt salmon. Loosely pack more rice over this and press the other half of the musubi press over this.

Cool the musubi off for about 15 minutes or so, and then wrap the nori strips around them.

Variations: Instead of salmon, fill the musubi with umeboshi, takuan, or nori tsukudani; or mix takikomi wakame into the hot cooked rice just before shaping into musubi.
Kimpira Gobo

1 large or 2 small pieces of gobo (burdock root)
1 medium carrot
2 to 4 tsp. vegetable oil
1 to 2 tsp. sugar
2 Tbl. sake (rice wine)
2 Tbl. shoyu (soy sauce)
1/2 tsp. Aji-no-moto (M.S.G.) *optional
1/4 tsp. shichimi togarashi (7 Spice Mixture) *optional

Peel and cut the gobo into thin shavings (like sharpening a pencil). While you’re cutting the gobo, soak the gobo shavings in water to avoid discoloration; drain. Peel and cut the carrot into thin shavings also.

Heat a frying pan and add the oil. Stir-fry the gobo and carrots on high heat until they begin to soften (about 3 minutes). Add the sake, and then stir in the sugar, shoyu, and Aji-no-moto. Continue to stir-fry on medium heat until the liquid is almost completely gone. Season to taste with the shichimi togarashi. Serve hot or at room temperature. Keeps about one week under refrigeration. Good as an appetizer with beer or sake!
Asian Guacamole
("Gari-mole")
recipe courtesy of Janet Nakahara

1 Tbl. iri kuro goma (toasted black sesame seeds)
1 large ripe avocado
1 Tbl. amasu shoga, also called gari shoga (pickled ginger), shredded
1 1/2 Tbl. rice vinegar
1 1/2 Tbl. sushi su (seasoned rice vinegar)
1/2 tsp. wasabi (Japanese green horse radish), this can be the pre-mixed neri wasabi in a tube or the powdered wasabi-ko mixed with water.

Dice or mash the avocado. Add half of the sesame seeds. Add the amasu shoga, both vinegars, and wasabi. Mix. Sprinkle the rest of the sesame seeds on top.

Grilled Ahi with Sesame-Ginger Sauce

- 1 1/2 lb. Ahi tuna
- 2 Tbl. shiro goma (white sesame seeds)
- 4 Tbl. shoyu (soy sauce)
- 4 Tbl. honey
- 4 tsp. ginger, grated to remove “threads”
- 2 or 3 stalks negi (green onion)

Remove skin and any bones from ahi fillet; cut into four serving portions. Toast goma by heating in a heavy frying pan, stirring constantly, until lightly browned.

Prepare sesame-ginger sauce by combining shoyu, honey, goma, and ginger; blend well. Marinate ahi for 1 hour. Lightly oil barbecue grill. Place ahi on grill and cook over medium hot coals. Baste frequently with sesame-ginger sauce. Cook 3 to 4 minutes on each side or until fish flakes easily when tested with a fork.

Place ahi on a warm serving platter and garnish with strips of negi. Makes 4 servings.
Ginger-Shoyu Salmon

4 salmon steaks, 3/4 to 1 inch thick

MARINADE:
2 Tbl. ginger juice (grate fresh ginger root and strain out "strings")
6 Tbl. sake (rice wine) [do not use mirin, the sweet cooking sake]
1 1/2 Tbl. shoyu (soy sauce)
1 1/2 tsp. vegetable oil
2 to 3 tsp. wasabi-ko (wasabi powder) or karashi-ko (mustard powder, like Coleman’s or S & B powdered yellow mustard)
salt and pepper to taste

Mix the marinade ingredients well. Put the salmon steaks in a ziplock bag and pour the marinade over the steaks. Squeeze out as much excess air as possible, and seal the bags. Refrigerate for 1 hour, turning over occasionally to marinate the salmon evenly. Broil the steaks for about 4 to 7 minutes (depending on your broiler); do not turn over the steaks (too easy to break). When the steaks are done, spoon the pan juices over the steaks before serving.

This is also GREAT grilled over charcoal!
Furikake Popcorn

1 pkg. microwave popcorn, unsalted kind if possible
3 to 4 Tbl. butter (4 Tbl = 1/2 cube butter) or margarine [note: you may not need to use butter if the microwave popcorn already has butter in it]
1 1/2 Tbl. Mishima brand nori komi furikake
1/4 cup mixed arare (rice cracker)

Prepare microwave popcorn per instructions on package. Melt the butter on low heat in a saucepan. Pour the melted butter over the freshly popped (still warm) popcorn, and mix to coat the popcorn evenly. Sprinkle the furikake over the popcorn and mix again so the furikake will coat the popcorn evenly. Mix in the arare and serve. The key to this is using the melted butter or margarine before you mix in the furikake. Without the melted butter, the furikake will not cling to the popcorn, and most of it will fall to the bottom of the serving container.

Variation: Use spicy arare, like kaki-no-tane (sold under several brand names), or wasabi kaki-no-tane. Regular kaki-no-tane arare has chili pepper mixed in; wasabi kaki-no-tane has Japanese horse radish mixed in. [Uegaki brand wasabi kaki-no-tane arare is good--but be careful, these little buggers are strong!] All kaki-no-tane arare (no matter which manufacturer makes it) are shaped like little “bananas,” so people who don’t like spicy arare will know which pieces to avoid. [Actually the arare are shaped like persimmon seeds, which is what “kaki-no-tane” means]
Negi Maki
[Meat rolled around green onions]

Thin sliced meat (meat sliced for Sukiyaki is ideal)
1 cup shoyu (soy sauce)
1/2 cup sugar
1/4 cup sake (rice wine)
1 tsp. minced or grated shoga (fresh ginger; peel first)
1 tsp. cornstarch
few stalks of negi (green onions) [or asparagus]

To make the sauce: combine in a sauce pan the shoyu, sugar, sake, and shoga. Heat to boil and simmer on low for 15 minutes. Cool.
Parboil the negi (or the asparagus). Let cool and roll up in the meat. Grill over charcoal, turning occasionally to cook evenly. Just before removing from the grill, brush the sauce on. Slice into 3/4 inch pieces. Serve immediately.
Kuromame
(from Mrs. Sachiko Takahashi, who learned this from Mrs. Kamechiyo Takahashi)

Kuromame (mame ni kurasu) is eaten on New Year’s Day for good health for the coming year.

Note: Start preparing this on or before December 30 (takes 2 days)

- 12 oz. kuromame (dried black beans)
- 3 1/2 cups boiling water
- 6 Tbl. sugar
- 3/4 tsp. baking soda
- scant 1 1/2 tsp. salt
- 3 Tbl. shoyu (soy sauce)
- 1 jar kuri kanroni (chestnuts in syrup) *Optional

Wash and rinse the kuromame; put the kuromame in a pot and mix in the boiling water, sugar, baking soda, salt, and shoyu. Let it soak overnight. The next morning, bring to a boil, and skim off the scum that rises to the surface. Cover with an otoshi-buta (wooden drop lid) or ceramic plate (not metal), which is about 1/2 an inch smaller than the diameter of the pot. Simmer on the lowest heat setting for 4 to 6 hours—the otoshi-buta will remain on during the whole period. [The otoshi-buta helps keep the kuromame submerged, helps increase the penetration of the seasoning, and decreases heat loss from the water’s surface. Pretty cool, huh?]

During the time you are simmering the kuromame, add 1/4 cup of cold water occasionally, so the water level doesn’t get too low. Cool, and serve. Keeps about 5 days in the refrigerator.

If you want to splurge, open up a jar of kuri kanroni (chestnuts in sweet syrup), drain, and mix in right before serving.

Alternate method: If a proper size otoshi-buta or plate is not available, increase the water to 5 cups and simmer the kuromame (on the lowest heat setting) covered for 6 to 7 hours. DO NOT PEEK during this time.

Pressed for time? Prepared kuromame is also available in cans (called “Kuromame Takarani”). Just open and serve (!). [Even purists who insist on making their kuromame from scratch have been known to keep a can or two of this around as a “back up.”]
Dungeness crab to da max

My absolutely favorite way to prepare crab

1 or 2 Whole Cooked Dungeness Crab (fresh, not previously frozen)
1 or 2 cloves garlic, crushed and minced
2 Tbl. butter (c’mon, live a little)
French bread or sourdough bread, sliced and heated

Disjoint and crack the crab, save the butter (kani miso) in a container. In a large pot (not teflon type, the crab will scratch the finish), head the butter on medium heat. Add the garlic and heat, stirring constantly for about 3 or 4 minutes. Take care not to raise the temperature too high and burn the butter. Add the crab butter and continue to stir over medium heat for another 3 to 4 minutes. Add the cracked crab pieces and stir so that all the pieces are evenly coated with the sauce. Cover and heat on low to medium heat for a few minutes. Check occasionally to make sure the crab is not burning.

Serve with the french bread. Suck the sauce off each piece of crab before shelling, and use the bread to sop up the sauce in the pot. HMMMMMM!!!
Kim Chee nama age

Kim chee is also great cooked! One of my favorite appetizers at a Japanese “pub” I visit is the stir-fried kim chee with pork. Here’s a tasty version using NAMA AGE, the deep fried firm tofu. Nama age is solid tofu inside--to not confuse it with age (also called aburage), the “hollow” deep fried bean curd used to make inarizushi (cone sushi).

2 piece nama age (also called atsu-age) 16 oz.
2 Tbl. cooking oil
4 to 6 oz. ground pork
1 to 1 1/2 cup nappa kim chee, chopped into bite-size pieces
1 tsp sugar
2 Tbl sake
3 to 4 stalks negi (green onions) sliced
2 Tbl. iri shiro goma (roasted white sesame seeds), pinch slightly to release more flavor
2 Tbl plus 1 Tbl shoyu (soy sauce)
1 Tbl sesame oil

Boil the nama age for a few minutes, drain, and blot dry with paper towels. Cut into 3/4” cubes, place into a bowl and add 2 Tbl shoyu and mix.

Put about 2 Tbl oil into a wok and heat up. On medium high heat, stir-fry the nama age, turning gently to evenly brown the pieces without breaking them up. Remove to a plate.

With the oil left in the wok, stir fry the ground pork, breaking it up as you cook. After the pork is browned, add back in the nama age and mix in the kim chee, sugar, and sake; stir together all ingredients for 1 minute.

Add the negi, iri goma, shoyu, and sesame oil. Stir together for a minute or so, and serve hot.

Despite the healthy main ingredient (tofu) in this dish, it still passed the “Bobby test.” My son loved it (I just didn’t tell him it was better for him than a cheese burger and fries).
Island-style Boiled Peanuts

These are a popular treat in Hawaii. It takes a little getting used to for some people, because the texture is not as crunchy as roasted peanuts. It's similar to eating the popular Japanese boiled eda mame (soy beans in pods). These are wonderful with cold beer on a warm Summer afternoon!

1 1/2 lb. raw peanuts in shell
1 Tbl. Hawaiian rock salt

Mix salt in a large pot with about 3 quarts of water. Stir until most of the salt is dissolved. Add the raw peanuts; there should be enough water to completely cover the peanuts. The peanuts will tend to float to the surface, so if you have a wooden drop-lid (the Japanese otoshi-buta) use it to keep the peanuts immersed as you bring them to a boil. If you don't have a drop lid, cover the pot with a regular lid. Stir occasionally so all the salt dissolves, and simmer for about 45 minutes. As in cooking noodles or eda mame, the trick is not to overcook these--so don't forget about these and leave them on the burner for a couple of hours like I did last time! [They came out too soft.]

Drain and cool before serving. Before eating, first remove the outer shell. [Don't laugh--if you've never had them this way before, you may not know. Some friends of mine in Hawaii watched in amazement as an adventurous mainland tourist ordered a lau lau for the first time and started to eat the outer ti leaf until the waiter ran over and told him not to.]

You can keep these up to a week or so in the refrigerator.
Miso Barbecue Chicken

1 cup shoyu (soy sauce)
1/2 cup sugar
2 Tbl. miso (Japanese soy bean paste)
2 Tbl. peanut butter [trust me on this]
2 or 3 cloves garlic, peeled and minced
1/8 cup fresh ginger, peeled and slivered
3 stalks negi (green onions), chopped
2 Tbl. mirin (sweet cooking rice wine)
1 Tbl. goma abura (Japanese sesame oil)
1 tsp. iri shiro goma (roasted white sesame seeds)
1/2 tsp. to 1 tsp. Chinese chili sauce (Lee Kum Kee brand chili paste with garlic is good)

Combine the ingredients to make a marinade sauce [I understand this is also a good hangover cure, although I’m not sure if it is ingested or applied locally]. Marinate 5 lb. of boneless chicken thighs (or breasts) for 2 to 4 hours and drain. Charcoal grill till cooked.
Lomi Lomi Salmon

1/4 lb. (or a bit more) salted salmon
3 or 4 fresh tomatoes, finely chopped
1/2 of a round onion (preferably sweet), minced
2 or 3 stalks of green onion, minced

Soak the salted salmon in cold water for 3 to 4 hours, (changing the water several times [this is to remove a lot of the salt from the salmon). Drain the salmon and remove the skin, bones, and white strings. The traditional Hawaiian method is to shred the salmon into small pieces using your fingers, but you may find it easier to use a spoon; use a knife to shred the salmon if you don't like the traditional method. (*Hint: I like to use latex gloves when doing a large batch of salted salmon; otherwise your fingers end up getting "wrinkled" from all the salt.) Place the shredded salmon pieces in a bowl with the rest of the ingredients and chill. Serves 4 to 5. Serve with POI.

NOTE: If you're in a hurry, first remove the skin from the salmon, cut the salmon into 2 or 3 smaller pieces, and put them in a bowl under slow running water. This method will remove the salt from the salmon much faster...so fast sometimes, that if you leave the salmon under running water for too long, you may return to find almost all of the salt gone; then you'll end up having to add salt back in to get the taste right!* Therefore, if you choose this quick method, be sure to occasionally cut a small piece of salmon off to check for taste.

*This is the voice of experience speaking, or as Tommy Chong used to say, “Uh, I've DONE that, man!”

Note: It is not safe to use fresh, raw salmon for lomi salmon or sashimi unless it has been cured first with salt. That's why lomi salmon recipes always call for SALTED SALMON. If you cannot obtain salted salmon, get a fresh salmon fillet, about 1 inch or less in thickness. If the salmon fillet is thicker than 1 inch, cut it in half to make it thinner (if it's too thick, it will take longer to cure). Pour about 1/4 cup of table salt over the fillet and gently rub in the salt; cover and refrigerate for 1 to 2 days; excess liquid will come out of the salmon as it cures. (Do not use iodized salt...it doesn't always dissolve completely; if available, use Hawaiian rock salt; be generous with the salt...it's better to use too much rather than too little.)
Shoyu chicken (soy sauce chicken)

1 1/2 Tbl cornstarch
3 Tbl. water
4 lb. chicken thighs
3/4 cup shoyu (soy sauce)
1 Tbl. honey
1 Tbl. oyster sauce
1/4 cup brown sugar
1 1/2 cup water
2 one-inch pieces of fresh ginger, peeled and crushed
3 clove garlic, crushed (remove skin)
2 pieces of star anise
4 stalks of negi (green onion)
2 Tbl. mirin (sweet cooking sake) or sherry few sprigs of Chinese parsley (also called coriander or cilantro)

Combine cornstarch and 3 Tbl water to make a paste; set aside. Brown ginger and garlic in a little oil. Add chicken and brown slightly. Combine shoyu, honey, oyster sauce, brown sugar, water, star anise, negi, and mirin. Add to chicken. Bring to a boil, then simmer for 40 minutes, turning pieces occasionally. Add cornstarch mixture to thicken sauce. Serve and garnish with Chinese parsley.

I also like to make this without thickening the sauce; if you like, you can skip the step where you add the cornstarch/water mixture at the end.
Salmon miso nabe

This is a type of nabemono (one-pot) dish, so it’s an easy meal to put together in a hurry on a cold evening. My wife has made this so many times, she freely substitutes and adds things, depending on what’s available (or how much time she has). It’s particularly good if you include the clams and shrimp—the soup stock becomes very hearty and tasty.

Salmon miso nabe

Put the cold water into a pot with the piece of konbu. Bring to a boil and remove the konbu before the water starts boiling; add the dashi powder and miso and mix thoroughly, keeping the water at a low simmer. Add the salmon, clams, shrimp, tofu, nappa, shiitake, and shirataki; this will lower the temperature of the water so you’ll need to raise the heat on the pot until it comes to a boil again. Reduce to a simmer for about 5 to 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. This can also be cooked at the table, if you have a portable burner—it’s an easy way to entertain guests, because they can help with the cooking, and there’s nothing like the warm communal feeling of eating out of the same pot. And speaking of warm, communal feelings, don’t forget to warm up the sake to serve with this meal! [Yes, the sake in the list of ingredients is not for the pot, but for you and your guests to enjoy with the food.]

Serve with rice.

Variations:
You can use salmon neck pieces, if available; although it’s a bit more work to eat these parts because of the bones, they have a richer flavor are worth the extra effort to pick out the bones.
You can substitute a bunch of spinach for the nappa, if you prefer.

Mabo Tofu (Spicy Pork Tofu)*

1 block of regular or firm texture tofu (soy bean curd), 16 to 19 oz. (do not use soft texture (kinugoshi) tofu)

1 Tbl. vegetable oil

1 clove garlic, minced

6 to 12 oz. ground pork (.4 lb. to .75 lb.)

2 to 4 tsp. Chinese hot bean sauce (or to taste)—also called “hot bean paste” or “chili paste with soy bean” [not the same as Chinese chili sauce or chili paste]

1 Tbl. shoyu (soy sauce)

1/4 tsp. salt or to taste

3/4 cup water or chicken stock

1 Tbl. cornstarch plus 1 Tbl. cold water for thickening

2 stalks negi (green onion), chopped

1 1/2 tsp. goma abura (Japanese or Chinese sesame oil)

Rinse tofu and drain. Cut into 1/2 inch cubes. Set aside.

Heat wok or skillet, add oil, garlic, and ground pork. Stir-fry pork on high heat until done (about 2 minutes). Add hot bean sauce, shoyu, salt, water (or chicken stock), and tofu.

Cover, bring to a boil and simmer (uncovered) for 2 minutes. Thicken with some of the cornstarch mixture to desired thickness. Add negi and goma abura. Mix gently to combine all ingredients without breaking the tofu cubes.

Variations: To make regular, non-spicy Chinese Pork Tofu, use Chinese bean sauce (min see jeung) in place of the hot bean sauce. In place of the ground pork, you can substitute boneless pork cut into strips.
